

Our company, Haws Corporation, is opposing the current guidelines listed in the latest FCC rule for fax communications. We are a legitimate company that does not send out spam. We communicate on a large scale with plumbers, contractors, customers, engineers, architects and various vendors via fax. Our customer base is over 6000 strong and we fax daily to many of them. We also receive many requests for documents (drawings, spec sheets, parts manuals, invoices, etc..) to be faxed to individuals. We even have an automated system so people can get the docs they need 24 hours a day. The current regulations as they stand will hamper our business. There are often many changes as well within our customer's organizations that it will be difficult to track who has given permission.

I see where this regulation tries to help guard against unwanted faxes, we get them too, but guidelines currently in place are not within the normal parameters of doing legitimate business. The ruling will jeopardize our business unless exceptions are made or changes are written in.
